Just Thinking --We humans have a strange fascination with hair. With that said, I've shaved off my beard and moustache...no, I'm not going through a mid-life crisis or metamorphosis. I have had the moustache for almost 20 years. I tell folks that my kids probably don't remember me without it, my grandchildren have never seen me without it and the grand dogs would probably bite me, because they would not know me.

There is something about a man's facial hair that strikes a note. I remember when I first went into the Navy; you could not have facial hair back then; a young man was pleading with the Chief Petty Officer to let him keep the moustache, which he said, "took him 18 years to grow". (It was gone the next day.)

Some people are generous with their hair. One of our granddaughters lets her hair grow long, and then she has it cut to be made into hair pieces for people that have lost their hair from disease. A lady we know cut her hair off, because a friend had lost hers to chemo and she did not want her to feel bad.

The Bible even has some strange things to say about hair. In Song of Solomon, the man tells his love that, "Your hair is like a flock of goats descending from Mount Gilead." (4:1 NIV)...Guys, after 44 years, I still wouldn't try to use that line. I'm partial to Proverbs 16:31, "Gray hair is a crown of splendor; it is attained by a righteous life." (NIV) In First Corinthians we are told that long hair is a woman's covering and her glory; then later Peter cautions us about letting it be a source of pride.

Incidentally, the reason I shaved has nothing to do with pride or appearance; I had a minor medical procedure in which they would attach sensors to various spots on my face and head. They said that they could attach them through the facial hair, but it would be like pulling a bandage off of a hairy leg...OUCH!!!

Everything is fine and the fur will grow back. See you in Church and Sunday School.

Finally -- If Jesus had lived in the Southern part of the United States instead of Israel, I am convinced that we would be observing the Lord's Supper today with cornbread and sweet, ice tea. - Hugh Troyer
